DEPARTMENT OF
POLITICS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

FACULTY OF
SCIENCES

OVERVIEW

Politics and International Relations is a fast-changing, broad-based discipline, allowing you to engage with the key issues of today's world. The study of international relations in this highly globalized and interconnected world cannot be ignored. The program allows you to combine your interest in international studies with the study of political theory and the national politics of a variety of countries.

In order to cater the growing needs of students, professionals, government functionaries and media men, the Department of Politics and International Relations is offering BS (Political Science), MA (Political Science) and MA (International Relations). The Department has also taken a major initiative to serve the need of military personnel and professionals from Armed forces and other fields. A certificate, diploma and a two years degree program MA (Military Sciences & Management) is scheduled to be offered soon.

The courses are designed to develop strong conceptual background in our graduates and equip them with up-to-date information. This approach is beneficial for developing a trend of advance research in the subject. The academic activity is also assisted by regular conducts of seminar, conferences and workshops on important events, issues and matters related to key policy formations, this helps broaden the exposure of our graduates.

The academic staff of the Department is all active in both research and teaching, giving students at undergraduate and postgraduate level access to the most recent thought in this field. The Department has one PhD and eight MPhil qualified faculty members who are continuously working for the promotion of inquisitive, independent, tolerant and honest intellectual minds and ability to comprehend and critically analyze the increasingly globalized world with respect for all of its diversities.

The course introduces the students to the underlying rules to acquire and use language in academic context. The course aims at developing grammatical competence of the learners to use grammatical structures in context in order to make the experience of learning English more meaningful enabling the students to meet their real life communication needs. The objectives of the course are to, reinforce the basics of grammar, understand the basic meaningful units of language, and introduce the functional aspects of grammatical categories and to comprehend language use by practically working on the grammatical aspects of language in academic settings. After studying the course, students would be able to use the language efficiently in academic and real life situations and integrate the basic language skills in speaking and writing. The students would be able to work in a competitive environment at higher education level to cater with the long term learners' needs.

Contents

- 1 Parts of speech
- 2 Noun and its types
- 3 Pronoun and its types
- 4 Adjective and its types
- 5 Verb and its types
- 6 Adverb and its types

The course is designed to acquaint the students of BS Programs with the rationale of the creation of Pakistan. The students would be apprised of the emergence, growth and development of Muslim nationalism in South Asia and the struggle for freedom, which eventually led to the establishment of Pakistan. While highlighting the main objectives of national life, the course explains further the socio-economic, political and cultural aspects of Pakistan's endeavors to develop and progress in the contemporary world. For this purpose, the foreign policy objectives and Pakistan's foreign relations with neighboring and other countries are also included. Relationship with Muslim countries has also been incorporated to develop the sense of unity of Ummah. This curriculum has been developed to help students analyze the socio-political problems of Pakistan while highlighting various phases of its history before and after the partition and to develop a vision in them to become knowledgeable citizens of their homeland.

Contents

1. Contextualizing Pakistan Studies
2. Geography of Pakistan: Geo-Strategic Importance of Pakistan
3. Freedom Movement (1857-1947)
4. Pakistan Movement (1940-47)
5. Muslim Nationalism in South Asia
6. Two Nations Theory
7. Ideology of Pakistan
8. Initial Problems of Pakistan
9. Political and Constitutional Developments in Pakistan
10. Economy of Pakistan: Problems and Prospects
11. Society and Culture of Pakistan

This course is built upon the mathematical concepts, principles and techniques that are useful in almost all undergraduate programs. The main objectives of the course are to enhance student's competency in application of mathematical concepts in solving problems and to improve their level of quantitative approach. Upon the successful completion of this course students would be able to develop understanding: Mathematical functions, building and solving linear and quadratic equations, Matrices and Determinants with application, sequences and series, and basic Financial Mathematics. This course has been designed to prepare the students, not majoring in mathematics, but with the essential tools of financial mathematics, algebra and geometry to apply the concepts and the techniques in their respective disciplines. The aim of teaching and learning mathematics is to encourage and enable students to: recognize that mathematics permeates the world around us, appreciate the usefulness, power and beauty of mathematics, enjoy mathematics and develop patience and persistence when solving problems.

Contents

- 1 Linear Equations and Quadratic Equations: Formation of Linear equation
- 2 Solving Linear equation involving one variable
- 3 Solution of Quadratic equation by factorization method
- 4 Solution of quadratic equation by square completion methods
- 5 Solution of quadratic equation by quadratic formula
- 6 Application of quadratic equation
- 7 Sequences and Series
- 8 Matrices and Determinants: Introduction of matrices
- 9 Types of matrices
- 10 Matrix operations
- 11 Inverse of matrix
- 12 The determinants and its properties
- 13 Solution of system of linear equations by determinants: Cramer's rule, Inverse Matrices Method
- 14 Mathematics of Finance: Simple interest
- 15 Compound interest
- 16 Annuities
- 17 Sets and Sets Operations
- 18 Permutation and combinations
- 19 Introduction to mathematical induction and binomial theorem
- 20 Basic Concepts of Trigonometry
- 21 Fundamental Identities of Trigonometry

Its purpose is to acquaint the students with a broader framework within which a political system develops, the various theories put forward and models designed. While highlighting the main objectives of national life, the course explains further the socio-economic, political and cultural aspects of Pakistan's endeavours to develop and progress in the contemporary world. This course will also be very helpful to expand the understandings of the reader pertaining to the existed contemporary knowledge of the world and to excel his personal capabilities to serve for others especially for the entire nation. It enhances the skill of students to underpin the understanding about political process, its valuable outcome and how to unleash socio-political activities in our surroundings. It enables the students to understand the political realities about polity. The role played in the political and developmental process by elite institutions such as civil and military bureaucracies will also be taken into account.

The course aims at developing linguistic competence by focusing on basic language skills in integration to make the use of language in context. It also aims at developing students' skills in reading and reading comprehension of written texts in various contexts. The course also provides assistance in developing students' vocabulary building skills as well as their critical thinking skills. The contents of the course are designed on the basis of these language skills: listening skills, pronunciation skills, comprehension skills and presentation skills. The course provides practice in accurate pronunciation, stress and intonation patterns and critical listening skills for different contexts. The students require a grasp of English language to comprehend texts as organic whole, to interact with reasonable ease in structured situations, and to comprehend and construct academic discourse. The course objectives are to enhance students' language skill management capacity, to comprehend text(s) in context, to respond to language in context, and to write structured response(s).

This is the general Statistics course designed for under graduate programs of arts and social sciences. Statistics is an integral part of arts and social science research. We live in a world where there is no shortage of numerical data and there is increasing demand for people who know how to make sense of it independent of the field of work. The goal of this course is to turn the students into one of such category. In this course, students will learn the basics of descriptive and inferential statistics and the most commonly used statistical techniques found in arts and social science research. The course is designed to give the students an in depth understanding of how these statistical techniques work but minimizing the mathematical burden on the student. While more focus will be given on the statistical analysis with the help of some statistical softwares SPSS, Excel etc. Moreover, the teacher will also focus on interpretation of statistical data results which are obtained from the statistical softwares. So these activities will improve the analytical and research activities of arts and social science students.

Contents

1. Introduction to Statistics: Descriptive and Inferential Statistics, Limitations of Statistics, Scope of Statistics, Variable, Data, Types of Variable and Data, Scales of Measurements.
2. Display of Data: Tabulation of Data, Graphical Display, Histogram, Bar Charts, Pie Chart, Stem and Leaf Plots.
3. Measures of Central Tendency: Mean Median, Mode, Box Plot, and Application in Real Life.
4. Measures of Dispersion: Range, Quartile Deviation, Mean Deviation, Variance and Standard Deviation, Coefficient of Variation, Z-score and their Application.
5. Normal Distribution: Normal Distribution and its Application,
6. Sampling and Sampling Distribution.
7. Hypothesis Testing: z test, t-test, Chi-square test
8. Regression Analysis: Simple Linear Regression, Multiple Regressions.
9. Correlation Analysis: Simple correlation, multiple correlations, partial correlation, partial correlation.
10. Test of independence between qualitative variables
11. All the observational analysis will be carried out using MS Excel and SPSS.

In recent years, community engagement has become a central dimension of governance as well as policy development and service delivery. However, efforts to directly involve citizens in policy processes have been bedeviled by crude understandings of the issues involved, and by poor selection of techniques for engaging citizens. This course will provide a critical interrogation of the central conceptual issues as well as an examination of how to design a program of effective community engagement. This course begins by asking: Why involve citizens in planning and policymaking? This leads to an examination of the politics of planning, conceptualizations of "community" and, to the tension between local and professional knowledge in policy making. This course will also analyze different types of citizen engagement and examine how to design a program of public participation for policy making. Approaches to evaluating community engagement programs will also be a component of the course. Moreover, citizenship education is education that provides the background knowledge necessary to create an ongoing stream of new citizens participating and engaging with the creation of a civilized society.

This course is a graduate-level course of Introduction to Public Policy. Over 40 years ago, Thomas Dye defined ‘public policy’ as “anything a government chooses to do or not to do.” Although this oversimplifies the term, “public policy” that is the fundamental activity of governments. It is through the public policy-making process that governments establish the framework within which all citizens (human and corporate) must function; and it is the process via which governments decide both which societal goals to pursue and how to (best) pursue them.” Policymaking is the art of developing responses to public problems. David Easton noted that the actions of government are the authoritative allocation of values for a society. One of the reasons to study public policy is to understand the policy determinants and to appreciate the underlying ideologies and rationales. These understandings bring coherence to government actions, permitting civil society to hold government accountable in its duty to advance public values.

The course is designed to provide the familiarity and comprehension of English literary pieces. The students may not be familiar or well-versed in the various genres of literature prior to taking this course. The course provides training and skills necessary to engage, understand, critically analyze, and enjoy the literary genres of literature: short story, poetry, novel and drama. The students will explore the basic concepts of literary technique, narrative, poetic, and dramatic structures and innovations to engage with the more advanced cognitive aspects of literature. In addition to these theoretical skills, students will also read below the surface of the texts for their historical, ethical, psychological, social, and philosophical value by developing insights in how literature gives us a window into both the experiences of others and wider appreciation for the human condition. The course explores literary production in English against local context in particular, by emphasizing shifts in thought as well as genre innovation, i.e. medieval to modern. It provides an introduction to key texts, authors and literary periods, exploring the relationship of texts to their contexts and considering multiple perspectives in the different literary genres.

This course offers the student a comprehensive introduction to history, historical institutions and issues. The course has four main objectives for the student to: understand what is meant by history, explore competing concepts and approaches, learn about how historical institutions and processes work and discuss contemporary historical issues in an informed manner. There are three main threads running through the course: 1) History of historiography: narrating and explaining the development of distinctive approaches within history since its emergence as a university-based discipline. 2) Theorizing historiography: how historians theorize what historiography is and distinctive historiographical approaches to the past. 3) Historiography in practice: how historians 'apply' these distinctive approaches to generate new understandings of past societies across different chronological and geographical contexts. This course will enable students to understand the methods of historical enquiry, including how evidence is used rigorously to make historical claims, and discern how and why contrasting arguments and interpretations of the past have been constructed.

This course seeks to develop an understanding among the students about the leading world ideologies that have been shaping the destiny of masses since centuries. Students will be educated about the characteristics of each of the listed ideologies and their impact on state systems, inter-state conflicts and cooperation. The course is subdivided into four major parts, each subsuming a particular intellectual lineage. The first section examines state theory of the (early) enlightenment period. The focus will be on different understandings of the state of nature and the state of society and their implications for political life. The second segment of the course turns to the liberal tradition and explores its core tenets, putting a particular focus on the distinction between political and economic liberalism. The course then shifts its attention to the critique of liberalism and to the critical tradition more generally, exploring Marxian and (Neo-) Polanyian texts. In the final section, the focus will lie on more contemporary works that both illustrate the ongoing development of some core ideas and give expression to countercurrents.

This course is designed to familiarize the students with evolution of Western Political Thought from Socrates to the modern period, with a focus on the political thought of most representative thinkers of major political movements. The course is an examination of the debate about human nature, governance, justice, equality, liberty, and human rights. The focus of the course will also be to see how, starting with Plato, such political ideas as “liberty”, “autonomy”, “authority” “contract”, “obligation”, “democracy”, “power” and “natural law” have received different interpretations. The main objective of the course is to see how political philosophy is both a response to historical events and a function of the philosophical ideas of a given epoch. This course will also be very helpful to expand the understandings of the reader pertaining to the existed contemporary knowledge of the world and to excel his personal capabilities to serve for others. It enhances the skill of students to underpin the understanding about political process, its valuable outcome and how to unleash socio-political activities in our surroundings. It enables the students to understand the political realities about philosophical aspects.

This course provides an overview of some key topics in politics and gender. The first part of the course includes some introductory theory, looks at the impact of gender on citizenship and voting behaviour, and considers whether the gender of our political representatives matters, how we might ensure that political institutions are gender balanced and what the normative arguments about the use of positive action measures are. The second part of the course has a more international flavour, considering women's rights and human rights, the importance of gender in international development, and the role of gender in armed conflict. We will also look at gender 'policy machinery', such as specialist government departments and quangos concerned with women and equality, at both the national and international level. Throughout the course we will seek to focus on 'gender' rather than on 'women', though in most cases women are the underrepresented sex. We will therefore often discuss women's equality, though we will also touch on the role of masculinity and men's movements.

Contents

1. History of feminism, feminist political thought and masculinism (extended lecture)
2. Gendering politics
3. Gender and political behaviour
4. Women's representation in elected office: does it matter?
5. Quotas, positive discrimination and positive action
6. Gender policy machinery and 'mainstreaming'
7. Gendered states and the gendered international
8. Gender and armed conflict
9. Gender and human rights
10. Gender and development

The course introduces the students to the underlying rules to acquire and use language in academic context. The course aims at developing grammatical competence of the learners to use grammatical structures in context in order to make the experience of learning English more meaningful enabling the students to meet their real life communication needs. The objectives of the course are to, reinforce the basics of grammar, understand the basic meaningful units of language, and introduce the functional aspects of grammatical categories and to comprehend language use by practically working on the grammatical aspects of language in academic settings. After studying the course, students would be able to use the language efficiently in academic and real life situations and integrate the basic language skills in speaking and writing. The students would be able to work in a competitive environment at higher education level to cater with the long term learners' needs.

This course is built upon the mathematical concepts, principles and techniques that are useful in almost all undergraduate programs. The main objectives of the course are to enhance student's competency in application of mathematical concepts in solving problems and to improve their level of quantitative approach. Upon the successful completion of this course students would be able to develop understanding: Mathematical functions, building and solving linear and quadratic equations, Matrices and Determinants with application, sequences and series, and basic Financial Mathematics. This course has been designed to prepare the students, not majoring in mathematics, but with the essential tools of financial mathematics, algebra and geometry to apply the concepts and the techniques in their respective disciplines. The aim of teaching and learning mathematics is to encourage and enable students to: recognize that mathematics permeates the world around us, appreciate the usefulness, power and beauty of mathematics, enjoy mathematics and develop patience and persistence when solving problems.

The study and practice of international relations is interdisciplinary in nature, blending the fields of economics, history, and political science to examine topics such as human rights, global poverty, the environment, economics, globalization, security, global ethics, and the political environment. Historically, the establishment of treaties between nations served as the earliest form of international relations. International relations allows nations to cooperate with one another, pool resources, and share information as a way to face global issues that go beyond any particular country or region. This course provides a comprehensive introduction to international relations, focusing in particular on its origins and historical evolution, its key concepts, major theoretical frameworks, main actors and institutions, the global architecture of power, and its dynamic nature in the process of globalization. More specifically, this course introduces concepts of power, statecraft, diplomacy, foreign policy, political economy and international security, and examines the evolution of international relations as a subject.

The course aims at developing linguistic competence by focusing on basic language skills in integration to make the use of language in context. It also aims at developing students' skills in reading and reading comprehension of written texts in various contexts. The course also provides assistance in developing students' vocabulary building skills as well as their critical thinking skills. The contents of the course are designed on the basis of these language skills: listening skills, pronunciation skills, comprehension skills and presentation skills. The course provides practice in accurate pronunciation, stress and intonation patterns and critical listening skills for different contexts. The students require a grasp of English language to comprehend texts as organic whole, to interact with reasonable ease in structured situations, and to comprehend and construct academic discourse. The course objectives are to enhance students' language skill management capacity, to comprehend text(s) in context, to respond to language in context, and to write structured response(s).

This is the general Statistics course designed for under graduate programs of arts and social sciences. Statistics is an integral part of arts and social science research. We live in a world where there is no shortage of numerical data and there is increasing demand for people who know how to make sense of it independent of the field of work. The goal of this course is to turn the students into one of such category. In this course, students will learn the basics of descriptive and inferential statistics and the most commonly used statistical techniques found in arts and social science research. The course is designed to give the students an in depth understanding of how these statistical techniques work but minimizing the mathematical burden on the student. While more focus will be given on the statistical analysis with the help of some statistical softwares SPSS, Excel etc. Moreover, the teacher will also focus on interpretation of statistical data results which are obtained from the statistical softwares. So these activities will improve the analytical and research activities of arts and social science students.

Contents

1. Introduction to Statistics: Descriptive and Inferential Statistics, Limitations of Statistics, Scope of Statistics, Variable, Data, Types of Variable and Data, Scales of Measurements.
2. Display of Data: Tabulation of Data, Graphical Display, Histogram, Bar Charts, Pie Chart, Stem and Leaf Plots.
3. Measures of Central Tendency: Mean Median, Mode, Box Plot, and Application in Real Life.
4. Measures of Dispersion: Range, Quartile Deviation, Mean Deviation, Variance and Standard Deviation, Coefficient of Variation, Z-score and their Application.
5. Normal Distribution: Normal Distribution and its Application,
6. Sampling and Sampling Distribution.
7. Hypothesis Testing: z test, t-test, Chi-square test
8. Regression Analysis: Simple Linear Regression, Multiple Regressions.
9. Correlation Analysis: Simple correlation, multiple correlations, partial correlation, partial correlation.
10. Test of independence between qualitative variables
11. All the observational analysis will be carried out using MS Excel and SPSS.

This course offers the student a comprehensive introduction to history, historical institutions and issues. The course has four main objectives for the student to: understand what is meant by history, explore competing concepts and approaches, learn about how historical institutions and processes work and discuss contemporary historical issues in an informed manner. There are three main threads running through the course: 1) History of historiography: narrating and explaining the development of distinctive approaches within history since its emergence as a university-based discipline. 2) Theorizing historiography: how historians theorize what historiography is and distinctive historiographical approaches to the past. 3) Historiography in practice: how historians 'apply' these distinctive approaches to generate new understandings of past societies across different chronological and geographical contexts. This course will enable students to understand the methods of historical enquiry, including how evidence is used rigorously to make historical claims, and discern how and why contrasting arguments and interpretations of the past have been constructed.

In recent years, community engagement has become a central dimension of governance as well as policy development and service delivery. However, efforts to directly involve citizens in policy processes have been bedeviled by crude understandings of the issues involved, and by poor selection of techniques for engaging citizens. This course will provide a critical interrogation of the central conceptual issues as well as an examination of how to design a program of effective community engagement. This course begins by asking: Why involve citizens in planning and policymaking? This leads to an examination of the politics of planning, conceptualizations of "community" and, to the tension between local and professional knowledge in policy making. This course will also analyze different types of citizen engagement and examine how to design a program of public participation for policy making. Approaches to evaluating community engagement programs will also be a component of the course. Moreover, in order to secure the future of a society, citizens must train younger generations in civic engagement and participation. Citizenship education is education that provides the background knowledge necessary to create an ongoing stream of new citizens participating and engaging with the creation of a civilized society.

This course is a graduate-level introduction to International Relations (IR) theory. It is structured around three core engagements: IR as a branch of philosophical knowledge; IR as a social science; and IR as a dimension of 'actual existing' world politics. The course surveys both mainstream and critical approaches to the subject, examining how these theories conceptualize 'the international' as a field of study. The course explicitly relates IR to cognate disciplines, reflects critically on the conceptual frameworks and modes of analysis used by IR theories, and studies the co-constitutive relationship between the theory and practice of international relations. This course offers the major conceptual appreciation of the theory and practice of International Relations. In addition to providing a detailed understanding of the fundamental theoretical perspectives and the issues that divide them, it poses the question of whether it is possible to overcome the main disagreements between these competing approaches. It tends to examine a range of important issues in contemporary international politics and use these theoretical frameworks to provide better understanding of these events.

Contents

The course is designed for beginners with either no formal background or very little acquaintance with economics. It develops the ability to explain core economic terms, concepts, and theories. The objective is to give the students a clear understanding of the basic concepts, tools of analysis, and terminologies used in microeconomics and macroeconomics. Emphasis will be on the use of graphs, diagrams, and numerical tables/schedules for exposition. A country's economy consists of three major economic agents; consumers, firms, and government. Analyzing the choices made by these economic agents is one of the main subjects of microeconomics. Students will learn how the decisions made by economic agents are represented in the market as demand and supply of commodities. Students will also learn about the determinants of macroeconomic conditions (national output, employment, and inflation), aggregate supply and demand, business cycles, public finance, international trade, and monetary and fiscal policy. The teacher is expected to draw examples from the surrounding world to clarify the concepts.

The course is designed to provide the familiarity and comprehension of English literary pieces. The students may not be familiar or well-versed in the various genres of literature prior to taking this course. The course provides training and skills necessary to engage, understand, critically analyze, and enjoy the literary genres of literature: short story, poetry, novel and drama. The students will explore the basic concepts of literary technique, narrative, poetic, and dramatic structures and innovations to engage with the more advanced cognitive aspects of literature. In addition to these theoretical skills, students will also read below the surface of the texts for their historical, ethical, psychological, social, and philosophical value by developing insights in how literature gives us a window into both the experiences of others and wider appreciation for the human condition. The course explores literary production in English against local context in particular, by emphasizing shifts in thought as well as genre innovation, i.e. medieval to modern. It provides an introduction to key texts, authors and literary periods, exploring the relationship of texts to their contexts and considering multiple perspectives in the different literary genres.

This course introduces students to the study of international political economy (IPE). The course focuses on the political foundations and consequences of the contemporary world economy. This course will employ some basic economic concepts that will be explained in the lectures and reading. Backgrounds in political science, international relations and economics would be very useful but not necessary to take the course. The course will survey the evolution of the international economic system since the Second World War, with particular reference to contemporary concerns, debates and issues. It will analyze international and domestic explanations for these developments. It will illustrate the varying explanatory power of the different approaches by applying them to a selection of empirical cases. This will provide both the background and the necessary perspective to understand the complexity and multiplicity of perspectives in contemporary IPE. The course is designed to provide the students with an introduction to some of the mainstream, as well as critical, approaches to the study of International Political Economy (IPE), comparative political economy and the emerging literature on globalization.

This course offers the major conceptual appreciation of the theory and practice of International Relations. This course also examines external and internal factors that shape states foreign policies, how states interact and why foreign policy choices may differ between states. The students will have many opportunities to learn about the foreign policies of major, middle and small powers through the reading material. It is aimed at giving students the tools to analyze, interpret and, ultimately understand the dynamics of foreign policy generally so that they might apply these to their study of the role of states in international affairs. In addition to providing a detailed understanding of the fundamental theoretical perspectives and the issues that divide them, it poses the question of whether it is possible to overcome the main disagreements between these competing approaches. It tends to examine a range of important issues in contemporary international politics and use these theoretical frameworks to provide better understanding of these events.

The course aims to provide a conceptual understanding in the analysis of the relationship between theory and practice of diplomacy. The course tends to explain and interpret the major underlying forces that shaped the evolution of diplomacy and to identify the main elements and process in practice of diplomacy. In such effort it provides knowledge of the nature of diplomacy; when diplomacy is appropriate; the advantages and disadvantages of different diplomatic methods and the lexicon of diplomacy. Furthermore, the course will begin with a focus on terminology, and an analysis of the terms, “diplomacy”, “cultural diplomacy”, “public diplomacy”, and “third-track diplomacy”. The course will then move to consider focusing in particular on the practices of the US, Germany, France, and the Soviet Union. The final part of the course will use case studies to compare and contrast propaganda, advertising, and cultural diplomacy. Course lectures will be complemented by course seminars, during which students will present and discuss selected case studies.

Here, comparative politics is mainly understood as “politics within the State”. The purpose of this course is to provide an introduction to the study of comparative political systems. It is also intended to make them aware of the nature and problems of political development. We will discuss a wide variety of topics dealing with political institutions and behavior. The readings will expose you to the main paradigmatic approaches in comparative politics. The readings will allow you to assess the relative strengths and weaknesses of the various methodological approaches used in comparative politics. Politics, a term best defined as the distribution, exercise, and consequences of power, exists at multiple levels of our society and in our daily lives. We experience politics in action, for example, during international negotiations, government policy choices, in the workplace, and in our own families. This course focuses on the formal, public sphere of politics and power relations through a systematic study and comparison of types of government and political systems. Comparativists (practitioners of comparative politics) seek to identify and understand the similarities and differences among political systems by breaking broad topics such as democracy or freedom down into the factors we find in individual systems.

The course examines the foreign policy culture and policy choices associated with the United States during the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. The course focuses on successive US presidents and their respective foreign policy decisions over the year. How the foreign policy of United States has been constructed and conducted? This course offers a general introduction to the history, traditions, and theories of US foreign policy. The class is divided in three parts. First, we draw on the foundational ideas in American political thought to introduce major foreign policy traditions throughout US history. Second, we examine key theoretical debates in international relations to ask if and how they affect American foreign policy making. Third, it focuses on the domestic and geopolitical implications that set limitations to, and opportunities for, the US abroad. Some of the questions we ask throughout the semester are: How is national interest defined and how has it evolved? How does presidential leadership shape American foreign relations? This course provides an overview of some key topics in politics and gender. The first part of the course includes some introductory theory, looks at the impact of gender on citizenship and voting behaviour, and considers whether the gender of our political representatives matters, how we might ensure that political institutions are gender balanced and what the normative arguments about the use of positive action measures are. The second part of the course has a more international flavour, considering women's rights and human rights, the importance of gender in international development, and the role of gender in armed conflict. We will also look at gender 'policy machinery', such as specialist government departments and agencies concerned with women and equality, at both the national and international level. Throughout the course we will seek to focus on 'gender' rather than on 'women', though in most cases women are the underrepresented sex. We will therefore often discuss women's equality, though we will also touch on the role of masculinity and men's movements.

Contents

1. History of feminism, feminist political thought and masculinism (extended lecture)
2. Gendering politics
3. Gender and political behaviour

In this course we investigate the role of international (governmental and nongovernmental) organizations (IOs) in global politics, with the extension to informal regimes such as rules and norms. We will focus on how IOs “institutionalize” cooperation at the international level, including their creation, internal dynamics, and their complicated relationship with state behavior in various issues. This course examines more specific IOs in a variety of issues such as collective security, trade, finance, democratic promotion, and regional integration. Case studies of IOs include the United Nations, European Union, World Trade Organization, International Monetary Fund, and others. The course is designed to critically evaluate the emerging role of international organizations, United Nations system and the question of its restructuring as a considerable issue in the 21st century. Globalization and regionalism is leading to establishment of new organizations in the present scenario. The past, present and future of organizations will be discussed in order to educate the students regarding their changing role in rising multi-polarity in the global politics.

This course aims to highlight the factors that have made Pakistan-China as an all-weather friend. What are the imperatives that have brought the two countries closer to each other? What are the impediments for this relationship? Moreover, the course also elaborates the impact of global politics on this bilateral relationship and vice versa. Since establishing diplomatic ties in 1951, China and Pakistan have enjoyed a close and mutually beneficial relationship. Pakistan was one of the first countries to recognize the People's Republic of China in 1950 and remained a steadfast ally during Beijing's period of international isolation in the 1960s and early 1970s. China has long provided Pakistan with major military, technical, and economic assistance, including the transfer of sensitive nuclear technology and equipment. This course will enable students to understand the history of China-Pakistan relations, economic and strategic cooperation and their role in contemporary regional and global politics.

This course seeks to develop an understanding among the students about the leading world ideologies that have been shaping the destiny of masses since centuries. Students will be educated about the characteristics of each of the listed ideologies and their impact on state systems, inter-state conflicts and cooperation. The course is subdivided into four major parts, each subsuming a particular intellectual lineage. The first section examines state theory of the (early) enlightenment period. The focus will be on different understandings of the state of nature and the state of society and their implications for political life. The second segment of the course turns to the liberal tradition and explores its core tenets, putting a particular focus on the distinction between political and economic liberalism. The course then shifts its attention to the critique of liberalism and to the critical tradition more generally, exploring Marxian and (Neo-) Polanyian texts. In the final section, the focus will lie on more contemporary works that both illustrate the ongoing development of some core ideas and give expression to countercurrents.
